Adventures Of Sam Spade
New Sunday WKPT Series

Sam Spade, license number 137596, seldom tells police all he knows. Sam's the sharp-talking crafty private eye, originated by Dashiell Hammett, and portrayed on the air by Howard Duff. And the Adventures of Sam Spade, coming to WKPT and NBC tonight at 8 for a new Sunday night series, promise plenty of thrills and chills.

Howard Duff, in the title role, has played Sam Spade on the air ever since the series started in 1946. A Bremerton, Washington native, Duff at one time was window-trimmer in a Seattle department store. The theater was his ambition, and a Seattle radio station gave him his first job ... not acting, but announcing. He worked there during the day, and acted in Shakespearean dramas with the Repertory Playhouse the evening without pay.

That was the beginning. Now, Duff divides his time between radio and films, and is currently being seen in a move about Sam Spade. On the air, his co-star on the Sunday night show will be Miss Lurene Tuttle, as the ever-essential secretary.

The Adventures of Sam Spade starring Howard Duff will switch from the Columbia network to the National Broadcasting network tonight at 7 o'clock and be a regular Sunday night feature on NBC.

8 p.m.—NBC: In a reversal of the usual network going on of late, "The Adventures of 'Sam Spade'", the toughest "private eye", will move from CBS to NBC at this time. "Sam Spade", Dashiell Hammett's detective character is portrayed by Howard Duff. Each episode of the series is a complete case, dictated by Spade to his secretary Effie Peirine (played by Lurene Tuttle), in a flash-back format, Sam, who usually doesn't tell the police all he knows, is constantly in conflict—and rivalry—with the best detectives of the homicide squad.-
